He spoke of the charitable institutions and the humane establishments whose existence had been twined with that of the Church from the foundation of the Christian religion; of the noble deeds done by men and women in the name of charity; of the origin and history of the Little fisters of the Poor; of the great good already accomplished by the order, and of its future of useful promise. The Bishop, in conclusion, prayed that "this work, so auspiciously commenced, may be crowned with complete success." Bishop Lynch is about sixty-five years of age. His appearance is venerable and commanding and his voice is rich and pleasant to the ear. His oratory is of a happy order and his gestures are graceful and effective. After the oration a collection was taken up in the crowd by committees from the various societies, and quite a handsome sum realized. The line of societies was then reformed,
